

Sing Your Life Newsletter - December, 2004

News I usually don't have time to write a December newsletter, but this year, although I am literally swamped with holiday parties, my new position at the Camarillo Academy of Performing Arts, my 27 local students and 50+ active internet clients, I felt I had to let you know what is happening at Sing Your life, and some changes that we are forced to make.

My mother used to tell me that my eyes were bigger than my stomach. As I have matured, I have realized that she meant that more than as a food context! I have always taken on more than I could handle. In fact, I seem to do better in life when my plate is so full that I need to juggle several plates in the air above my head.

The problem now seems to be that I am not 20 something, 30 something, or even 50 something anymore, and there are some things that are suffering because of my overloaded schedule, not the least of which is my health, and specifically, my stamina! This last bout with illness was a total surprise in that it put me down for over a week, and that's quite unusual for me.

We are sadly discontinuing custom Midi's for the present, because of time constraints. Of course any of the existing Midi Files on the site are free to all of our members. We may resume custom midi's in the Spring! I feel awful about having to do this. It has always been my mission to deliver what I promise, and it might seem that I'm reneging. Let me assure those of you who have orders in for MP3's that I will get them to you as soon as I can. I'm pretty close to the limit on site space so I will burn CD's of your requests and mail them to you. So, if you're browsing around the site this month, you may find a few broken links as we are updating all the pages to inform our visitors of the new policies.

Please be patient with us! 2004 has been the most successful year since we started this site in June of 2000. We are very thankful to all of you who read our newsletters and browse our site. We remain committed to singers everywhere who wish to develop and share their talent! And we are here to help! Have a fabulous holiday season, singers! And thanks for being here!
